THE SENIOR CLASS
WARD SEMINARY
NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE

We, the class of 1912, dedicate

The Iris

To one who has worked for fame,

To one who's not worked
in vain,

To one who has made life
successful,

To one whose leaving's
regretful—

Miss Lavinia Goodwin.

Iris Staff—Before

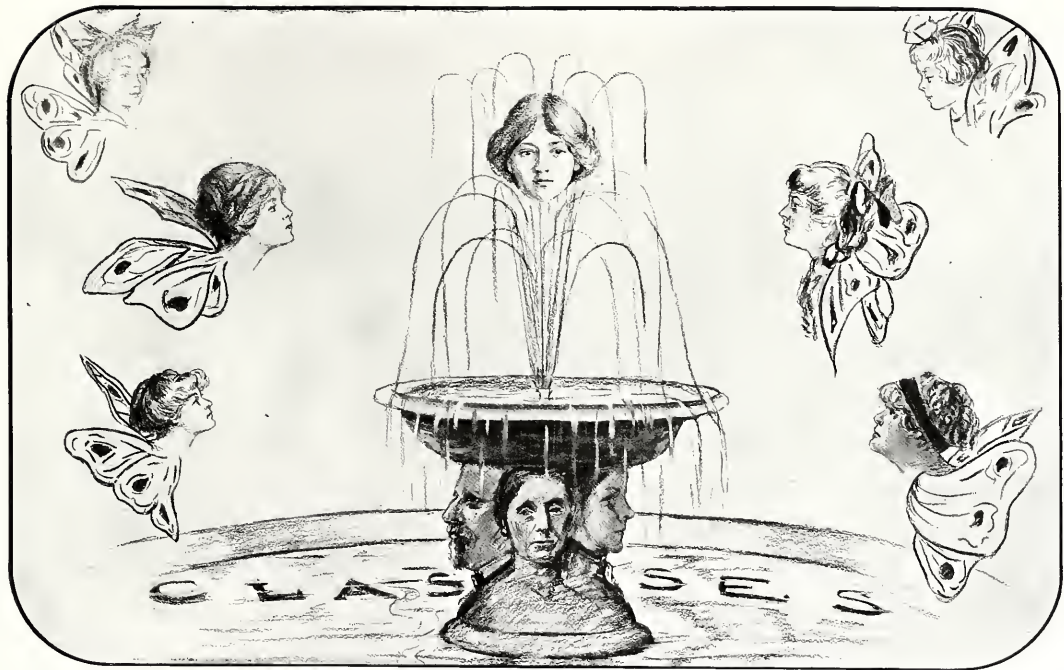

Who are these girls that seem so bright,
So energetic, strong, and gay,
Ready to work with all their might
In a fine, systematic way?
How bright their eyes, how strong they look!
As though at failure they would laugh.
We all expect a splendid book
From this year's brilliant Iris staff.

IRIS STAFF—BEFORE

The Classes

The Freshman is the wee small bud,
Untouched by wisdom's gentle light;
The Sophomore, opening to the rays,
Shows peeping petals, pure and white;
The Junior is the half-blown rose,
Filling our school with fragrance rare;
The Senior's petals are opened wide,
Revealing a heart of gold hid there.

To the Junior Maid

I.

There's a dear old school in a dear old town,
Junior Maid;
Through all this wide land it has gained renown,
Junior Maid;
Knowledge dwells within those halls,
Wisdom looks down from its walls,
High ambition to you calls,
Junior Maid.

II.

We Seniors are leaving this school at length,
Junior Maid;
For life's stern struggle we gather our strength,
Junior Maid;
You receive our former place,
Guard and save it from disgrace,
Toward pure virtue turn your face,
Junior Maid.

III.

All the long years that may come in your life,
Junior Maid,
May be filled with glory or filled with strife,
Junior Maid;
Prepare now for what may be,
Work and study manfully,
Our good wishes are with thee,
Junior Maid.

“They Dever Catch Cold”

“ Though I don't mean to scold,
Don't you know you'll catch cold,
With your neck so low
And your sleeves rolled up so?”
Asked the teacher of Lit.
Of a lively young chit,
Who was shiv'ring away
On a cold winter's day.
“ Do, mab,” returned she;
“ I'b as warb as cad be.”

“ You will catch a cold and die,
With your skirts up so high,
Your stockings so sheer,
And your low shoes, my dear,”
Said our teacher of French
To Miss Blank, of front bench.
“ Ker-choo!” replied she,
With great dignity;
“ I shall dever catch cold,
As by doctor foretold.”

“ Now, my dear Kate,
You and your roommate
Must put on more clothes,
From your head to your toes,”
Said a teacher whose name
Is wide spread with fame.
“ I would, mab, indeed,
Most gladly codceed
But for doctor's request,
And I'b sure he knows best.”

So this is the way
They all talked the dext day,
With their doses quite red,
And bad colds in the head,
Which beant do bore sprees
Till they shook cough and sneeze,
And learned what it beant
To withstand argubent.
(You can't read this one through Unless you've had one, too.)

With Apologies to Longfellow

Upon a platform in our school
A noble lady stands,
With stately mien and strictest rule,
She issues her commands,
And all the idle girls in school
She with her keen eye scans.

Her hair is brown and tinged with white,
Her face is good and kind,
Her brow tells of great intellect
And of her brilliant mind.
She looks the whole school in the face
The naughty ones to find.

Week in, week out, from morn till noon,
We can hear her orders given;
Hear her tap her little bell,
As out to class we're driven,
Fearing a failure we shall make,
Though very hard we've striven.

Thanks, thanks to thee, our worthy friend,
For the good that thou hast done,
Helping each curb her wayward thoughts
And guide her active tongue,
Making us stronger for the strife
In all the days to come.

A Psalm of Suffragettes

I.

Tell me not in mournful numbers
That the good men of to-day
Won't be "housewives" of to-morrow,
For the women must hold sway.

II.

Votes are real and women earnest,
And the ballots are the goals;
To the home the husband turneth,
While his wife is at the polls.

III.

Not housekeeping and not cooking
Is their destined end or way,
But to vote that some good looker
May draw the Chief Executive's pay.

IV.

In this world's broad field of campaign,
In the politics of to-day,
All the women sing the refrain:
"Now at Home the Men Must Stay."

V.

Lives of suffragettes remind them
They can make their deeds a crime,
And, retreating, leave behind them
Records that are not so fine.

VI.

May the women be contented
In their own homes to abide,
And leave the men that, unmolested,
They may o'er the laws preside.

With Apologies to Edgar Allen Poe

I.

Once upon a sunny morning some of us, without a warning
To our teachers or other higher powers who o'er us reign,
Decided we would run away—"cut chapel," as we often say;
Very gently we came tripping, tripping to the old "Gym." door;
"Just for fun," we softly whispered, tripping to the old "Gym." door—
Only this, and nothing more.

II.

But upon the threshold turning, all our souls within us burning,
Thrilled us—filled us with fantastic terrors never felt before;
So that now, to still the beating of our hearts, we stood repeating:
"None can find us here retreating, hidden safe behind the door."
"None can find us here retreating," we kept saying o'er and o'er;
"We shall dance, and nothing more."

III.

Ah, distinctly we remember it was in the bright September,
And each separate, sorry member wished forgiveness to implore.
Eagerly we wished the morrow; vainly then we sought to borrow
From each one surcease of sorrow—sorrow for our trouble sore,
For this deep and grievous trouble, which seemed greater than before,
And would leave us—nevermore.

IV.

But a messenger soon found us, bringing sentence there that bound us,
To study "Webster" o'er and o'er—study hard, and nothing more.
You can see us never flitting; still we're sitting, still we're sitting,
Finding words of quaint and curious origin of forgotten lore;
And the lamplight o'er us streaming throws our shadows on the floor,
And our souls from out the shadows that lie floating on the floor
Shall be lifted—nevermore.

“The Iris”

“The Iris!” At the magic word
Steps forth a Senior tall,
And two besides, who smaller are,
And hasten from the hall.

No sharp rebuke arrests their plight,
No teacher bids them stay;
For they are on the staff, and write;
Their work brooks no delay.

“The Iris!” Sure, some wondrous spell
Is woven by this word;
Neglected studies are condoned,
And lessons passed unheard.

And little groups of talking girls,
On gallery or stair,
If they but breathe this word, are left
All unmolested there.

“The Iris!” May it long possess
This power to release,
And may the staff together work
In harmony and peace.

How I Write My Weekly Theme

MY weekly theme gives me as much trouble as the extraction of a worrisome tooth, and, like the tooth, it has got to come out sooner or later. It would be much easier if I were to march right up to the pen and paper and have it over with. The objection to this method, however, is that I cannot write until I am literally forced to do so.

If on Monday I am assigned a theme for Friday, I invariably wait until Thursday night to begin. Then if I do not succeed in devising one, I plead "lack of time." I have no doubt but that if I were assigned a theme a month ahead of time my excuse would be the same—unless, of course, I should invent a different one in the mean while.

But as to the writing of the theme. I get my pen, preferably new, inkstand, and paper; and, sad to relate, that is as far as I do get. When I am seated comfortably within hearing distance of the phone, I rub my hands together in joyful anticipation of—I know not what; possibly that I am about to accomplish a great work. Then I strike an attitude resembling that which you have, no doubt, seen in pictures of great authors at their desks—pen in hand, hand on brow, and mind, judging from the look on their face, as blank as the paper before them.

Then for my subject. Thinking, with me, involves a relaxed position; so I "shump" down comfortably in my chair and take careful aim with my pen, ready to jot down the first idea that occurs to me. I rack my brain diligently; yet find one, I cannot. A story has been told that Alfred Tennyson suffered from the same lamentable condition. It seems that in a letter to a friend Mrs. Tennyson writes: "My Dear Delia: Can't you suggest something for poor, dear Alfred to write on? Once he has a title suggested to him, there is no difficulty in his turning out a magnificent work, as you know. However, my ideas are all exhausted and we are in despair." So I smile and console myself with the thought that I possess at least one quality of a genius—that I cannot think of a subject—and I am proud of it.

Finally I persuade myself to write without a subject, and then comes the desperate struggle for ideas. Something like a flock of wild ducks then swoop down on me, and at the first shot of the said pen they scatter promptly. I have often wondered if there is a resting place for flown ideas. That, however, has no connection with this theme. Gradually they return when I am almost discouraged, and the next difficulty is the selection of the more suitable ones. I find I cannot describe a recent snow scene without bringing in the fall of an exceedingly fat lady, that being naturally connected with my idea of the scene. This interesting incident not only violates the laws of rhetoric, but the dragging in of such a weighty specimen requires both time and exertion; so I abandon my snow scene entirely. It is equally hard for me to write a narrative theme, because I get so wrapt up in describing scenery, etc., my poor characters have scarcely time and space to bid farewell to the reader. I usually resort to an exposition, as I can put a little of everything in one and receive not less than a zero.

But, as every one knows, "tempus fugit," or "you can't keep on forever," and by the time I have tried my skill in all these three branches it is time that all little children of my age should be in bed; so I retire with the firm resolution to write my theme the next day at school.

When the next day comes, as I have only one vacant period, I try to be very busy at that time. But no human could refuse such an invitation as I receive to "chase" up to the corner and procure "eats." So at the first opportunity, money in hand—well, it is just like what an old negro said: "It shorely am a sin ter put whisky in the way uv a honest nigger, then ax him is he drunk it."

On my return I find I have exactly fifteen minutes in which to help eat the articles, wash my hands, find ink, and write my theme—leaving, I think, about four minutes in which to "select ideas, arrange them logically, and connect them well." Writing hurriedly, I jot down something any self-respecting Subfreshman would be ashamed of, thanking Providence the while that a wicked girl has talked, and, therefore, invoked a lecture from a well-known and highly honored official. This, keeping the classes late, gives me time to assume a languid air and ruff my hair in front. But I congratulate myself that my tooth is written, or my theme is pulled, as you please.

So any one can see that it takes a genius to write a theme, and geniuses in a preparatory school are made, not born. So follows the logical conclusion: "Though she hath the gift of eloquence and understandeth all grammar and all rhetoric, and though she possesseth such knowledge that she never writeth a misrelated participle or useth 'so' wrongly, and hath not genius, her works are become as 'nothing,'"

LADY WARREN,
Junior Class, 1912.

The Law of the Ward Place

I.

Now this is the law of the Ward Place,
As old and as true as the sky:
And the girl that shall keep it may prosper,
But the girl that shall break it must die.

II.

Study daily from the dawn till the sundown;
Study deeply, but never too deep;
And remember the day is for studying.
And forget not the night is for sleep.

III.

Keep peace with the lords of the Ward Place—
The teacher, the doctor, the cook;
And trouble not instructors the silent,
And sing not nor play where they look.

IV.

When ye eat from a sack from the corner,
Ye must eat it alone and protected,
Lest others take part in the eating,
And the whole crowd of ye be detected.

V.

If ye dance about midnight, be silent,
And wake not the Gym. with your cries,
Lest ye call from their bedsides avengers,
And hurry them fast to your sides.

VI.

Ye may talk during periods and after,
Ye may talk in the mornings bright;
But talk not in the space between them,
For there is one who uses her might.

VII.

Because of his skill and his cunning,
Because of his standing and age,
In all that the law leaveth open,
The doctor himself is the sage.

VIII.

Now these are the laws of the Ward Place,
And many and mighty are they;
But after all's said and after all's done,
They're compassed by the one word, "Obey!"

Vandy Man

Hush, hush, hush!

Here comes a Vandy man!

Be quiet, little ducky, dear;

He'll catch you if he can.

Hush, hush, hush!

There goes the Vandy man!

But you are not afraid of him;

So catch him if you can.

Parting Advice

To all the girls who're leaving Ward to-day,
To all the girls who'll come to Ward some day,
I have two final warning words to say:
 Don't cram.

It does not work; we've tried it, and we know;
For at the tests, heart-rending was our woe.
We didn't know a single thing, and so—
 Don't cram.

In English: "Dear! Did Addison or Pope
Write 'Rasselas?'" And: "Can we ever hope
With Wordsworth's heavenly genius to cope?"
 Don't cram.

At History tests: "O, dear! Who was that man
Who said that men as monkeys first began?"
And: "Who was our first tourist to Japan?"
 Don't cram.

"The Sistine Mother—now who painted her?"
"Which painter's art did Charles the First prefer?"
I vow that ne'er again shall this occur.
 Don't cram.

And so you see how terrible the fate
Of girls who cram. How sad to contemplate!
Take warning now ere it become too late—
 Don't cram.

Limericks

There is a young lady named "Jean,"
And silent she never has been.
She's a bad little lass
To talk between class,
For that's "morally crippled," as seen.

There is a young lady we know,
Who is called by her kind friends "Hippo."
The reason, I ween,
Will be readily seen,
For she can't be called "little and po'."

Eunice is a sweet little maid;
She's accomplished in French, it is said;
But "Je lovez-vous"
Is all that she knew,
And that's not very much, I'm afraid.

There was a young lady contrary,
Whose lips should have been stationary;
But she talked and was spied
By Miss Jennings, who cried:
"You are morally crippled, Miss Mary!"

There was a nice little lass,
Who was made president of her class.
Her first name is "Jean,"
And it's readily seen
That she's thought by her schoolmates "some class."

And now in our class list we see
Our jolly, robust Cora Lee.
It would be a sin
To say she is thin,
But we hope that some day she may be.

Our brilliant Roberta, they say,
Can dance like a graceful young jay.
It is her ambition
To be a musician,
And we're sure told she will be some day.

Stately is "Tommy," and tall
And pretty; but that is not all;
She slaves like a Turk
When she once starts to work,
And we can't do without her at all.

Our Fire

'Twas in the wee hours,
And all through the house
Not a creature was stirring,
Unless 'twas a mouse,
When up from the street
Came a cry loud and clear:
"Ward is a-fire, boys!
The firemen call here!"

The fire in the grate,
In room eighty-one,
Cast a brilliant reflection,
Like the bright, glaring sun.
The windowpane glittered,
And this 'twas, no doubt,
Which caused the deception
And made people shout.

The school was awakened
By the noise below;
The bells began ringing,
And the whistles to blow;
Girls ran to the window,
And imagine their fear
When the ladder was hoisted
And a man came near.

If Mr. T—— had been here
With his picture machine,
A number of pictures
He'd have taken, I ween.
But funniest of all
Was a sight in the hall,
When our dear Miss S——
Ran out at the call.

She met a brave fireman,
Who said 'twas a bluff,
Upon which she perceived
She wore not enough;
For in her excitement
She'd forgotten to dress,
And had rushed from her room
By terrors oppressed.

The fireman attempted
To make very clear
The excitement was over,
When this met his ear:
"You crazy old thing,
Get away from here!"
He went, no doubt,
For he's not here now;
But the fire's all over,
And we're glad, I trow.

K. L. WILLIAMS.

Der Orgebra

Der veller vat sits on der highest schair,
Unt fools der parber by wearing long hair,
Unt shakes a stick all around in der air—
Is der leader.

Der veller vat's next to him on der right,
Unt keeps his instruments gleam and bright,
Unt blays like a bird, aber not so quiet—
Dat's der trombone blayer.

Der veller vat sits on his face a schmile,
Unt dries to blay mit lots of style,
Bnt gets a blue note vonce in a vile—
Dat's der gornet blayer.

Der veller vat's next to the leader's stand
On der left is der leader's right-hand man;
He's der principal um-pah in der band—
Dat's der biano blayer.

Der veller mit his hair parted in der middle,
Unt blays yust like die second viddle,
Unt thinks he's " in it " yust a liddle—
Dat's der viola blayer.

Der veller in front of der old trombone,
Mit eggseegnon unt squveeky tone,
Unt blays' gadenzes all alone—
Dat's der glarinet blayer.

Der veller vat makes us all der noise,
Unt blays on all der paby toys
To blease der little girls unt poys—
Dat's der drummer.

Der veller vat schtands der corner in,
But he don't hold his viddle unter his schin,
He don't haf zo many notes to but in—
Dat's der hase viddler.

AOELAIDE RUSSELL.

The Mirror

THE little mirror in the narrow hall leading from the chapel to the gallery seems to possess a potent charm and a peculiar fascination over all who pass that way. It has an attraction stronger than that of the lodestone and draws to itself the eyes of all girls, and so mighty is the magic power of it that a great change comes over every one for the few moments she looks into the glassy depths. I will prove to you the truth of my words. Let us watch the classes as they pass at this period.

There is the bell. Now doors on all sides open, and out come girls of all shapes and sizes, arrayed in the varying hues of the rainbow. They are all coming toward the hall, and the first one reaches the door. She is a pretty little girl, with light curls and bright blue eyes. Now she comes within the spell of the magic mirror, and involuntarily she lifts her eyes to it. Simultaneously she lifts her hands to her hair; and after a few deft pats on her head, her neck receives attention. In the meantime her figure has straightened, her eyes brightened, and her whole face is dimpling and smiling. After a moment under the spell, she passes on; and the next, a handsome brunette, takes her place. Again the little mirror proves its power, and the dignified brunette smiles at her reflection.

But will these two plain girls coming next feel the attraction of the mirror? Yes, both have stopped and for a moment looked in the mirror. But now come a great number of girls, and will the little mirror be noticed in the rush and hurry of the crowd? Let us see. There! Did you notice how some crane their necks for only one glance at the mirror? Then others more bold even stand stock still before it, thus blocking the line until pushed on by others eager for a moment's look into the mirror.

LELIA COLEMAN.

Bits of News from Ward's

A very sad accident happened at the Seminary last week. A fly, promenading up and down on the sleeve of Agnes Vance's Peter Thompson suit, slipped and broke his neck. Lest further catastrophes of this nature should happen, we refer Miss Vance, and also Miss Mary Witherspoon, to the Nashville Pressing Club—only one dollar a month.

Avalyn Coleman was awfully mad the other day in French Class. It seems that her hand was asleep and somebody made a noise and woke it up.

There was a fight in the "Gym." the other day—in fact, a double header. Somebody said that Lady Warren looked like Irma Cooper; and though the victims of discussion fought valiantly five rounds, they never came to a compromise as to which of them was insulted.

Yesterday Melinda Hampton slipped and hurt herself in the chapel.

Miss Susie Weakley has just finished a portrait of Miss Sue Holmes. We never saw such marked resemblance. It looks exactly like Miss Mary Lee Crockett.

A Subfreshman, who seems very wise, defined a kiss as "nothing divided by two."

Great excitement prevailed in the chapel one day last week. Miss Jennings announced that a man, one of Ward's "Specialties," was coming to hold chapel. However, when he walked in, we could tell by his hair cut that he was a married man; so we ran promptly to Mrs. Toney for something to support us.

Miss Mildred Wells has got the world beat chewing gum. Guaranteed, 287 chews per minute.

Our motto: "A little learning is a dangerous thing." So forget it.

LADY WARREN,
Junior Class, 1912.

Iris Staff—After

What is this dreary-looking crowd?

Why do they look so worn and ill?

We once of them were very proud;

If you'll believe it, we are still.

Their eyes are weak, they're all run down,

For thoughts they have to dig and delve

And yet we feel they've earned a crown—

This Iris staff of nineteen twelve.

Marathon

Find a Marathon owner and you'll find a man supremely satisfied—there's a satisfying beauty in the graceful dominant lines of a Marathon Car, in the richness of the finish, the deep luxuriousness of the upholstery—but most important of all there is a never-failing source of gratification to the Marathon owner in the deep-down goodness of the car; the qualities of structural perfection that find expression in the month after month and year after year of never-failing service.

A Marathon car never disappoints—it almost never wears out. It is built in the old-fashioned way, in a part of the country where people have time to do things right—where quality stands out as a dominant note in the manufacturing practice. It is built in a factory the management of which prefers to turn out 1,500 cars under careful, painstaking, personal supervision, rather than 3,000 cars in the ordinary hustle-up-the-production way.

There is a personality to a Marathon car—a sterling goodness that doesn't begin to be represented in the price—the Marathon outclasses its price almost two to one.

This is Our Golden Jubilee Year

SURELY, to have attained these fifty years of ever-widening service, the pure blood of fair dealing must have been running through this business all of this half century, building anew the old tissues and creating new and better business muscles to meet the new demand.

We feel that we alone have not been building this business, but that our friends and patrons, the entire community around this center of Nashville, have had a mutual hand in it. For this reason we invite you to join us in the celebration of our anniversary—the fiftieth milestone in our journey.

Elbert Hubbard said:

"If a man can preach a better sermon, write a better book, or make a better mouse trap than his neighbor, though he build his house in the woods, the world will make a beaten path to his door."

We say: Be rational, buy a

National Steel Range

The beaten paths lead to our house from almost every State in the Union, because we make a better range for less money than our "neighbors."

The New Method Gas Range

is also the leader in its class—it reduces your gas bills; will not rust, burn out, or explode; bakes and broils evenly—on all sides alike.

Music is one of the fine arts; to express it, your piano must be a work of art.

Why attempt musical expression without a piano that responds to your every mood and feelings?

STARR PIANOS are works of art, conceived in an atmosphere of art; wrought by artist workmen—owned and loved by the leading musicians of the world.

The Starr Piano

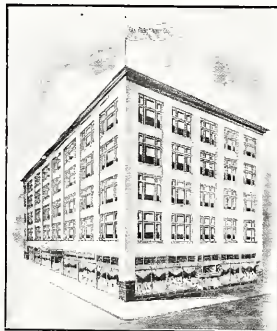

has a reputation founded on the recorded judgment of the world's greatest artists and the combined opinion of the most eminent musicians and scientific experts.
